THE BOY AS A BARBARIAN. - The world the boy lives in is separate and distinct from the world the man lives in. It is a world only inhabited by boys. No events are important or of any moment save those affecting boys. How they ignore the presence of their elders on the street, shouting out their calls, their invitations. their appointments from our midst, as from the vertest solitude! They have peculiar calls, whistles, pass-words, by which they communicate with each other at long distances like birds or wild creatures. And there is as genuine a wildness about these notes as about those of a fox or coon. The boy is a savage, a barbarian, in his taste—devouring roots, leaves, bark, unripe fruit, etc.; and in the kind of music or discord he delights in. They have their fashions that spread from city to city. In one of our large cities the rage at one time was an old tin can with a string attached, out of which they tortured the most savage and earsplitting discords. The police were obliged to interfere and suppress the nuisance. On another occasion, at Christmas, they all came forth with tin borns, and nearly drove the town dis-tracted with the bid-ous uproar. Another savage trait of the boy is his un-truthfulness. Corner him up, and the chances are ten to one he will lie his way Conscience is a plant of slow growth in the boy. If caught in one lie, he invents another. I knew a boy who was in the habit of eating apples in school. His teacher finally caught him in the act, and, without removing his eye in the act, and, without removing the eye from him, called him to the middle of the floor. "I saw you this time." said the teacher. "Saw me what?" said the boy innocently. "Bite that apple." replied the teacher. "No, sir." said the rascal. "Open your mouth," and from its depths, the teacher, with his thumb and finger, took out a piece of apple. "Didn't know it was there, " said the boy unabashed. Nearly all the moral sentiments and graces are late in matur He has no proper selfing in the boy. respect till past his majority. Of course

[From the Truckee Republican.] An exciting scene took place last week in a long snow-shed this side of the Summit. As the eastern bound freight train had imerged from the tunnel the engineer saw a deer some on the track. The frightened animal was flying ahead of the engine at break-neck speed. The attention of all hands was immediately called to the flying deer. The whistle commenced scream ing, and then followed one of those highly exciting timess which excite even the dullest to the highest pitch. There was no alternative for the pursued and timid fawn but to keep straight on down the track. The gloomy cavera formed a narrow race track, and the flitting openings through which the gleaming light entered added to the wildness of the adventure. For over half a mile the hissing monsters, with their vital of fire, rushed onward toward their defenseless victim. On down the narrow, almost endless, and the dark cheerless passage way, puffing, groaning and bellowing forth for their angry impatients, eager for the life of the fleeting little innocent. For a time the result seemed almost certain, the pursurers gained steadily on the pursued. The deer never left the track, but sped on as straight as an arrow. The game was almost within the clutch of the iron horse, and in a few moments would have laid lifeless and mangled beneath the wheels. And all hands were on the edge of expectancy. The eager anti-cipation for the pray settled almost into a conviction. The breaks were loosened and full steam applied, when just shead a small opening, caused by last Winter's heavy snow, was seen by the frightened animal. Like a dart it shot through it, and up the steep side of the rocky mountain, while a shout of good-natured disappointment went up from the crew on the train, and the great engines still continued to groan and puff, but seemed to be with chagrin and disappointment,
